It's impossible to imagine anyone captivated by the beginning not wanting — needing — to go back for the end." — Linda Winer, Newsday "An enormously impressive work of the imagination and intellect, a towering example of what theatre stretched to its full potential can achieve." — Clifford A. Ridley, Philadelphia Inquirer "Perestroika is a masterpiece." — John Lahr, New Yorker

Tony Kushner's two part epic play "Angels in America" is truly a landmark of United States literature. The two parts of the play (subtitled "Millennium Approaches" and "Perestroika") together represent a passionate and intelligent exploration of American life during the era of President Ronald Reagan. Kushner peoples his play with individuals who are for the most part "marginal" in some way in U.S. culture. His characters include Mormons, gay men, men with AIDS, Jews, a drug addict, and an African-American drag queen. These various perspectives and voices allow Kushner to create some fascinating dialogues about the "American dream"--and about the nightmares that can go along with it. Kushner's cast of characters is excellently drawn, but perhaps his most astounding creation is influential lawyer Roy Cohn, a fictionalized version of a real historical figure. A gay Jew who is himself viciously homophobic, Kushner's Cohn is grotesque, hilarious, frightening, and seductive all at once. This character allows Kushner to make fascinating statements about power, politics, and sexual identity. Also brilliant is Kushner's use of Mormonism and its theology as an integral component of the play. Kushner is the first literary artist I know of who has used Mormon themes and motifs in such a consistently compelling and intelligent way. Kushner is, in my opinion, neither a proselytizer for nor a basher of Mormonism, but his presentation of troubled Mormon characters and his apparent satirizing of some aspects of Mormon theology both strike me as potentially controversial.
